plants. Lane said other possible uses of the study are 1. To assist a community to evaluate its shortcomings and assets, 2. To serve as a basis of long range planning for the community, 3. To assist in preparing individual community development plans, 4. Most importantly, to be used as a fact book and community work book with industrial prospects.

The above sites range in size from nine to 930 acres and in most cases, the size of the particular site can be increased or decreased to meet specific requirements.

Six of the sites are adjacent to railway facilities and all are served by good highways. Each site is illustrated by a topographic presentation and brief description of the property. A map of the area pinpointing the location of individual sites selected is shown on a page opposite each sheet.

The study was made at the request of the Appomattox County Board of Supervisors and with the cooperation with the citizens of the county. Copies of the study will be made available upon request to those interested in the economic development of the area.

The study is divided into six major classifications –physical assets, manpower, market resources, government, community facilities and industrial sites.

The economic survey is based on information supplied through a local study committee headed by James A. Smith, of Appomattox. Other committee members include Otho W. Martin, Jr., Carter Martin, William Dudley and C. S. Booth.
